

Tiffany Mrotek

Tiffany's demonstrated commitment to equity and the environment can be seen in the work she does for a living, but also in her conversations, dedication to her personal work, and the connections she makes with others. Tiffany is the Director of Energize Careers at SEI where she works to build climate leaders and connect people with opportunities for a thriving future.

Tiffany helped to start Landforce, a Pittsburgh-based nonprofit that invests in people through restoring the environment. Landforce provides workforce development training and support for individuals with barriers to employment. The training is focused on work readiness skills and land stewardship hard skills while also fostering a love for the environment and a passion for caring for our earth. Tiffany built on her experience with Landforce to co-author the American Forests' Arboriculture Pre-Employment curriculum, the national standard for urban forestry workforce development programming. She also created a first-of-its-kind national network of urban forestry workforce programs called the Tree Equity Workforce Network, where programs learn together and from each other.

Tiffany brings a focus on equity and inclusion to the environmental movement and believes that we won't move the needle unless diverse voices are heard, and we are all invested in making an impact. Tiffany received her master's in social work in 2016 from the University of Pittsburgh where she studied macro social work focused on working with communities, organizations, and using social action.
